3. "The materiel we receive is from sources which will never dry up. The Russian arsenals produce 30 thousand tanks; the Russian General Staff disposes of 150 divisions which can be set in motion within 48 hours, destroy all resistance on their way and get to Paris.
4. "Only reaction is still hampering us, and we have as yet been unable to destroy and unmask it. A few thousand bandits in the mountains do not represent a real difficulty, even if they do bring confusion. They do not disturb us as much as the hundreds of thousands who live among us, spy on us, and inform London and Washington by means unknown to us. Our American friends tell us that the State Dept. knows everything about the activity of our party.
5. "Comrades, we must prevent this with all the means at our disposal, no matter whether this pleases the 'western democracies' or not. To this end extraordinary means must be mobilized. It is not enough to be cautious within the administration we must purge our rank and file, and then get down to work among the immigrants. That problem you must leave to me. I am quite capable to settle that now 'in four eyes' (I N 'alone with one other person present'). A widely cut amnesty is naturally necessary, but be assured, even the written word does not bind us. It does not matter whether we will catch 70% or 100% of these bandits. But it is all-important that their contacts be cut, and that their crossing to America, as Truman would wish them to do, be made impossible.
6. "War against the Anglo-Americans is unavoidable. It may be only a few weeks hence. But if it were possible for the Anglo-Americans to collect a number of immigrants and to drop them in our territory, that would be a great danger for our party. Comrades you know well that the population is not with us. This is proved by the lack of surpluses in grain which the peasants should give up of their own free will. The peasant is perfidious and stubborn. We cannot beat out of their heads their faith in 'pops' (clergy) and those gods. I do not want to mix in religious problems, but if the 'pops' toll the bells, the rising will be general. We cannot forget that the peasants are very well armed, so to be successful we need time. Now to work. We have little time at our disposal. I wish you, Comrades, success and much luck in your work. I am now forced to leave you."
7. At 1930 Tito left the hall in company of the comrades Bakrica, Gorstica, and V. Nazer.
